Introduction

Geographic Scope of Regional Studbook

The White-bellied Stork North American Regional Studbook documents all white-bellied storks that reside or once resided in the United States of America, Canada and South America. This studbook contains only the one species, Ciconia abdimii.

The historical studbook contains 406 specimens (89.124.193). The living studbook contains 109 specimens (39.40.30). The data is current through October 31, 2008.

Introductory Notes

This studbook includes the following assumptions and estimates:

Hatch information: Hatch dates that are unknown are estimated to be one year prior to being obtained by the North American importing institution +/- 6 months.

Hatch dates that are estimated to a given year will be estimated to July, 15th of that year +/- 6 months.

Capture information: Unknown capture dates are given as six months of age, using the assumed hatch date as the base point.

Transfer information: Unknown dealer acquisition dates are calculated at 60 days prior to arriving at the receiving institution.

Natural History

Description

The white-bellied stork is one of the smaller stork species. They average 68-81 cm tall and weigh about 1-3 kg, with the male usually being slightly larger. Both sexes look alike; they are predominantly black with the head, neck, upper breast and back glossy with purple and green. The lower back, uppertail-coverts and underparts, from the lower breast to the belly are white. The bill is a pale jade-green with a red-tip and the bare skin of the face is blue with a red patch over and in front of the eye and under the bill. The legs and feet are dull olive. During breeding season the facial skin becomes bright blue. The lores, eye-ring and chin become bright red and the legs become more greenish gray with pinkish red intertarsal joints. Chicks are thinly covered with dark down which changes to a soft light greenish down by about 10 days. The bill is black with a white tip and the legs are pink. By four weeks of age, the young are fully feathered and resemble the adults, but are duller. Immature birds are patterned like adults but are duller and browner.

Distribution and Habitat

Their natural range is Africa, south of the Sahara and even into southwest Arabia. They usually breed north of the equator and then spend the rest of the year in eastern and southern parts of Africa. Movements seem largely timed to follow the rains. They are normally found in open grasslands, but can also be found in cultivated areas near water, and even in semi-deserts. They usually roost on trees or cliffs. They are common to abundant throughout their range, at times gathering during migration in groups of thousands.

Diet

In the wild, they feed almost exclusively on army worms and also grasshoppers, crickets and sometimes mice and small aquatic animals. They congregate in large flocks at swarms and grass fires. In captivity they will eat fish, small mice, meat and insects.

Breeding and Chick Development

In the wild, they usually breed early in the rainy season around May. In captivity they breed well and usually nest in the spring. Breeding displays can include bowing up-and-down, head-shaking, whistling, bill clattering and presentation of food. They are colonial and may even breed in groups with other species. They usually nest in trees as well as the rooftops of huts and sometimes on cliff ledges. Both sexes work on the nest, which is usually made of sticks but will also have some grasses and leaves added. They can lay 2 to 4 eggs and incubation averages 28-31 days, with both parents taking turns. Hatching is asynchronous, and chicks are born almost naked but develop a light gray down in a few days. They are taken care of by both parents, who feed by regurgitating onto the floor of the nest. Fledging usually occurs around 60 days. In captivity these birds can live 16 to 20 years.

Status

Their status is not globally threatened. They are common, locally abundant, with flocks of up to 10,000 found in Uganda. In some areas they are protected by local superstitions as a bringer of rain. Locals sometimes encourage the birds to nest in roofs of native huts because they are thought to bring good luck.

Captive Population History

White-bellied storks were first brought into the country in 1953. At that time the dealer Fred Zeehandler brought several birds in from Africa. These birds went to the San Diego Zoo. Several other shipments came in starting in 1962, 1965, 1978 and 1979. Since 1979 all birds in the population have been captive bred.
