Acknowledgements

I would like to thank the regional studbook keepers, Bernard Holdijk and Amanda Embury for continually providing updated regional information, as well as the institutions who provided information for this studbook. I have done my best to record it accurately.

I would also like to thank my predecessors, Dr. Suzette Tardif and Dr. William Langbauer for all their hard work on this database before me. Dr. Joanne Earnhardt also provided helpful guidance early on in this process. Laurie Bingaman-Lackey provided critical assistance with the last edition of this studbook and continues to provide help every time I ask.

The staff and resources of Denver Zoo have supported my work on this studbook, as did Disney's Animal Kingdom and Houston Zoo, Inc. before that.

Finally, a special thank you to Dr. Anne Savage and Rebecca Phillips, who got me into this mess in the first place.

Introduction

The Cotton-Top Tamarin studbook is the world's largest, with over 12,000 historic specimens at over 300 institutions from every region of the world. Last published in 2008, this is the 6th edition.

The data in this studbook are current through 31 July 2011. As of that date, the historical population was 5454.4739.2489 (12652) animals at 634 institutions.

The living population was 819.752.206 (1777) animals at 378 institutions. This includes:

427.387.135 (949) at 198 institutions in the European region
62.65.25 (152) at 30 institutions in the Asian region
221.200.20 (441) at 109 institutions in the North American region
22.11.13 (46) at 6 institutions in the South American region
22.23.8 (53) at 14 institutions in the African region

Cotton top tamarins are listed as Critically Endangered on the IUCN Red List of Threatened Species. This species is endemic to Colombia is primarily threatened by habitat destruction. There are estimated to be about 6000 individuals left in the wild but that number continues to decline.

Tens of thousands of cotton top tamarins were imported in the 1970s and 1980s for use in biomedical research in Europe and the United States. This research primarily focused on the spontaneous development of colonic adenocarcinoma in this species, which makes them a good model for human medicine. Some smaller colonies were also kept in university laboratories for behavioral research. Many of these labs have closed in recent years, but every effort was made to record the final disposition of these animals in the studbook.

A great deal has been published about the natural history, captive history, and husbandry of cotton top tamarins so that information is not included in this document.

This studbook serves as the North American Regional Studbook for the Cotton Top Tamarin Species Survival Plan (SSP), managed by the American Association of Zoos and Aquariums (AZA). Regional studbooks are also kept in Europe and Australia by the following individuals:

Contributing Institutions

The majority of the European and Australian data was obtained from the regional studbooks. Institutions that no longer hold cotton top tamarins were not contacted again for this edition unless there were questions about their data. Institutions listed below are those that were contacted directly to provide data or assist in resolving data validating issues.

Data were requested from the following institutions but were not received prior to the publication deadline. This is likely due to a variety of causes, including outdated contact information and language barriers. When possible, ISIS data and data from sending and/or receiving institutions was used. Institutions whose data were more than 3 years out of date were designated as Lost to Follow-up (lff).

Updated data from these institutions would still welcome and should be sent to the studbook keeper.
