Studbook Description

Scope

This studbook database includes all known specimens of Amur (also known as Siberian) tigers held in North American facilities with lineages traceable back to wild-caught tigers, beginning with imports into the U.S. in the 1930s and current through 1 June 2013. Privately owned tigers with unknown or unverified pedigrees are not included either in this regional studbook or in the international studbook. There is only one tiger with unknown parents in the regional studbook (SB 1163); this tiger is believed to be an Amur tiger unrelated to other specimens in the studbook and has no living descendants in the managed SSP population.

Conventions

The International Tiger Studbook is maintained by Peter Müller through Zoo Leipzig, Germany. International studbook numbers are used here as permanent regional studbook numbers. When necessary, temporary studbook numbers (prefaced with “T”) are assigned until international studbook numbers are known.

Wild-caught tigers are assumed to be unrelated except for those instances when sets of cubs are captured on the same date and location (see Parental Assumptions below). If an animal is estimated to be an adult at capture, then rearing type is assumed to be parent-reared.

Date estimates generally follow conventions outlined in the Guidelines for Data Entry and Maintenance of North American Regional Studbooks. Given no other information, the age of wild-caught tigers at capture was estimated to be one year. Unknown capture dates are estimated to have occurred two weeks before the first known transfer. Transfer dates are recorded as the date on which a specimen arrives at the receiving institution.

Data Field Descriptions

The following standard SPARKS data fields are used:

Studbook #: Unique number assigned to each individual in the studbook

Sex: M = male; F = female; U = unknown sex

Birth Date: Animal’s birth date (‘~’ indicates an estimated date; ?? indicates date is unknown)

Sire/Dam: SB#s for animal’s sire and dam. WILD = tiger that never entered captivity; wild-caught tigers have WILD parents; UNK = identity of parent is unknown; MULT = more than one possible sire or dam

Location: Institution holding the tiger at the time (Ltf = lost to follow-up; fate subsequent to that date is unknown)

Date: Date on which the event occurred (‘~’ indicates an estimated date)

Local ID: Accession or other identification number assigned by the institution (institution specific)

Event: Capture, birth, transfer, death, or release

Rearing: Parent, hand, foster, peer, supplemental, none (stillbirths), unknown

Name: House name at the institution (may be institution specific)

Status: SSP = part of SSP population; EXCL = permanent non-breeder/excluded from SSP genetic analysis

Parental Assumptions

Two pairs of tiger cubs were wild-caught at a young age and are known or assumed to be siblings. For these specimens, the parents have been designated as follows to indicate this relationship:

WILD1/WILD2: Parents of 3622 and 3623, brought in as wild-caught cubs and believed to be littermates.

WILD3/WILD4: Parents of 3957 and 3958, brought in as wild-caught littermates upon dam’s death.

Hybridization Issues

This regional studbook (and the international studbook) contain records of several tigers now thought to be hybridized with Bengal tigers as evidenced by the production of white cubs at Seoul Zoo upon inbreeding of this line. SB 1915 born at CENTERHIL is believed to have carried the Bengal white coat allele. Thus, offspring SB 2537 and 2538, and F2 tigers SB 2882-85 and SB 2961-63, are also considered to be hybridized. These tigers are now dead with no descendants in North America, with the exception of SB 5566 and 5565 recently imported from the Seoul Zoo. These tigers are italicized in the studbook report.

Status in the Wild

The Amur tiger (Panthera tigris altaica), also known as the Siberian tiger, is one of six remaining tiger subspecies (three other subspecies went extinct in the last century). As a subspecies, the Amur tiger is generally the largest, as might be expected for a northern, cold climate taxon; however, there is significant morphological variation among individuals within each tiger subspecies.

Listed as Endangered by the IUCN Red List, wild Amur tigers primarily occur in the Russian Far East in the Primorsky Krai region, although a few individuals may live in northern China and North Korea. The population is believed to have gone through a severe bottleneck of 20-30 individuals in the 1930s, and exhibits low genetic variation compared to other tiger subspecies. Molecular studies suggest that the global captive Amur tiger population now contains greater genetic variation than the wild population (Russello et al. 2004; Luo et al. 2010).

Poaching of tigers and their prey remain the primary threat to wild Amur tiger populations, although habitat loss and associated activities (e.g., roads, fires) are also a threat. Anti-poaching and other conservation efforts enabled the population to expand to 400-500 tigers by 2005. Monitoring efforts and partial surveys, however, suggest a population decline in recent years. In the winter of 2010 Wildlife Conservation Society (WCS) researchers reported a sudden change in the behavior of several radio-collared tigers, postulating the possible existence of a disease, possibly canine distemper, affecting hunting ability and resulting in increased tiger-human conflicts and associated mortalities. There is concern that disease-related mortality combined with existing poaching losses may result in significant risk for the wild population. Conservation efforts continue, including anti-poaching activities, increased law enforcement, disease monitoring, and monitoring of tiger populations. The AZA Tiger SSP's Tiger Campaign currently supports several WCS tiger conservation projects in Russia.

Status of the North American Captive Population

There are currently 155 (62.93) Amur tigers registered as living in 52 North American zoos, all but 5 of which are maintained in AZA institutions and are managed as part of the SSP. Two (0.2) of these tigers are considered to be subspecific hybrids (see p.1, Hybridization Issues).

The North American Amur tiger population began with imports in the 1930-1960s, and grew substantially in the 1960s. The population peaked around 230 tigers when the Tiger SSP was established in 1981. Since then the North American population has been slowly managed to meet the target population size of 150 individuals for the SSP population. The current sex ratio is female-biased, although the sex ratio has fluctuated over the past few decades.

The current SSP population is genetically derived from 57 founders and represents about 96.2% gene diversity. Inbreeding levels are low, with an average inbreeding coefficient of 0.0109. Stochastic projections suggest that the population can maintain about 91% gene diversity for 100 years under current population management strategies.

The WAZA Amur Tiger Global Species Management Plan (GSMP) was established in 2012 and held its first meeting in May 2013.

Wild-caught Amur tigers (e.g., orphaned cubs, unreleaseable conflict tigers) periodically enter the EARAZA tiger program and provide opportunities for occasional genetic supplementation of the Amur tiger ex situ global and regional populations.

For more detailed demographic and genetic population information, see the most current Population Analysis and Breeding Plan for the Amur Tiger Species Survival Plan, produced annually and available on the AZA website.

Additional Amur Tiger Studbooks / Management Programs

This studbook represents the North American Regional Amur Tiger Studbook maintained under the Association of Zoos and Aquariums (AZA), and in conjunction with the AZA Amur Tiger Species Survival Plan[®] (SSP), coordinated by Tara Harris, Minnesota Zoo. The following additional studbooks and management programs also exist for captive Amur tiger populations:

European Regional Studbook/EAZA Amur Tiger EEP: Jo Cook, Zoological Society of London

Euro-Asian Regional Studbook/EARAZA Amur Tiger Program: Tanya Arzhanova, Moscow Zoo

Japanese Regional Studbook/JAZA Amur Tiger JSMP: Akiko Yamada, Kobe Municipal Oji Zoo

International Tiger Studbook: Peter Müller, Zoo Leipzig

WAZA Amur Tiger GSMP Co-Convenors: Tara Harris, Minnesota Zoo, and Tanya Arzhanova, Moscow Zoo
